TWO VARIETIES OF SPANGLED HAMBURGS

Golden Breed Is Most Useful to the Owner of a Small Flock.

THE NEW YORK SUNDAY STAR

The Hamburg is one of our oldest standard breeds of poultry. It originated in Holland but takes its name from the city of Hamburg. The pencilled varieties are the first of these, and the Spangled, Black and Whites were originated in Great Britain, where they are extensively bred. The breed was known as the Dutch primary day layer because of its heavy egg production, and they were used in the primary among fanciers and small breeders. Their laying qualities appear to have made them popular for two centuries, and they were used in the making of several of our popular varieties. The Spangled Hamburgs were the product of the English fanciers who crossed the original Dutch primary day layer, which was of the pencilled variety, with some of the British fowl. Hatching Wells states that this was the old method of breeding. At any rate, it produced a fowl which was essentially productive, slightly larger than the so-called Hamburgs, yet an equally good layer. These Spangled Hamburgs are of two and beauty that is solely their own plumage rivals the pleasant in color. The Golden Spangled Hamburg is superior to be one of the most beautiful breeds. It has been bred for a long and its prolific laying is unique. But the eggs and the fowl are small, so that for large utility fowls, the breeder, however, or for a beautiful useful home flock the Golden Spangled Hamburg has many attractions.

TWO VARIETIES OF SPANGLED HAMBOURG

Golden Breed Is Most Useful to the Owner of a Small Flock.

The Hamborg is one of our oldest and noblest breeds of poultry. It originated in Holland but takes its name from the city of Hamburg. The pencilled varieties were the first of these, and the Spangled variety came later. Both were originated in Prussia, where they are extensively bred.

The breed was known as the Dutch variety long before it became famous for its heavy laying propensities, and was greatly popular among fanciers and small breeders. Their laying qualities appear to be the object of the Belgian fanciers who raised the original Dutch every day variety, which was of the pencilled variety. Some of the British folk, however, have come to believe that this was the old spotted Breasted Game. At any rate, it produced a fowl which was essentially beautiful, slightly larger than the standard Hamborg, yet an equally good layer.

These Spangled Hamburgs are of two colors, Golden and Silver. Both have been named in the same manner and have been developed to a distinctive type.

and beauty that is solely their own plumage rivals the pleasant in color of the Golden Spangled Hamburg appears to be the most desirable of all. It has been bred for a long time and its prolific laying is unique. But the eggs and the fowl itself are small, so that for large utility flocks the Spangled Hamburg will not answer. To the breeder, however, or for a beautiful useful home flock the Golden Spangled Hamburg has many attractions.
